Kristen and Lydia, Cal Poly, San Luis Obispo

A new class is jumping in to a college near you! Punk Rope, a rowdy yet competitive fitness class is currently being offered at NYU and working it's way into colleges such as Rutgers and the University of New Hampshire. High energy levels comes from the punk rock music instructor Tim Haft puts together, paying homage to legends such as The Clash, The Ramones, The Bouncing Souls and others. The actual rope itself is US made, and by the hands of mentally and physically disabled people. There are 5 lengths of rope from 7 ft. to 11 ft. long, to fit each individual bod! Ropes, including shipping & handling, come to a mere $10 (temporary tattoos included!) www.Punkrope.com

Washington University

in St. Louis has reason to be proud.

Medical student, Leana Wen, has been awarded two years of all-expenses paid study as a Rhodes Scholar at the University of Oxford in England for Fall 2007. Leana entered Cal State L.A. when she was 13 and earned a bachelor's degree summa cum laude in biochemistry at the age of 18. At Oxford, she will pursue a master's degree in global health science. 32 U.S. students were chosen as Rhodes Scholars this year, based on high academic achievement, personal integrity, leadership potential and physical vigor. The Rhodes Scholarship is the world's oldest international fellowship.
